Welcome

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to our latest annual Toy Collectors Price Guide, which gives you an estimate on how much your vintage toy collection might be worth. We've scoured auction house results from around the country to bring you a super selection of collectables, along with detailed descriptions and large, colour photographs.

Whether you collect diecast vehicles, model locomotives, toy figures, TV and film memorabilia, tinplate or something a little more unusual, I'm sure you'll find plenty to tickle your fancy in this year's guide. In the pages ahead you'll find over 1000 listings, worth a staggering £359,702 in total.

The toy collecting market, although somewhat different this year, certainly doesn't seem to be slowing down, with genres such as Star Wars positively booming throughout 2020. What's more, the interest in the mainstream media continues with articles or TV shows regularly extolling the virtues (and potential profits) in toy collecting.

While toy fairs and swapmeets have sadly been put on hold for most of 2020, auctions continue to attract the buyers and sellers, eager to add to their collections or perhaps move some unwanted items on to others.

Online auctions, such as eBay, have become an important part of toy collecting, with some amazing results, so it makes sense to include a selection of the millions of toys sold on the website throughout the year.

Well, all that remains is for me to say that we all hope you enjoy this year's edition and that 2021 continues to be a bumper year for toy collecting. Happy collecting everyone!

Guide to... Buying toys

Choosing where to buy your collectables doesn't have to be a daunting task, just read our beginner's guide below to help get you started.

Buying collectables is certainly one of the most enjoyable aspects of our hobby – hunting down that last piece for your collection can be a thrilling and, potentially time consuming task. However, the satisfaction when you finally snag that unusual colour variation of Dinky truck or vintage BR livery carriage to finish off your model railway layout, is a truly wonderful feeling.

But if you're just starting out in the world of collecting, it can sometimes seem a rather confusing jumble of jargon. What's a swapmeet? What constitutes 'mint condition'? How much commission will you have to pay at auction? The list can go on and on. To help you out, we're going to run through some of the basics that will get you started with your collection.

Firstly, one of the best places to start is the aforementioned 'swapmeet'. The term actually refers to a toy fair but dates back to the '70s when, instead of just buying toys from a fair, people would often bring along their collectables to swap with each other at a local pub or village hall. Now toy fairs are big business and before Covid struck, most weekends you would find an event somewhere in the country. Pick up the Collectors Gazette each month to find out when they will restart!

One of the joys of a toy fair is the opportunity to get your hands on the collectables you're thinking of buying, along with meeting other likeminded individuals to talk about diecast, TV and film memorabilia or whatever you've decided to collect.

Alongside toy fairs, the other most common way to buy items is one of the many toy auctions. Again, there are regular toy auctions, with the likes of Vectis holding at least one every month, while others such as Special Auction Services, Wallis & Wallis, Warwick & Warwick and Lacy, Scott & Knight hold them every few months. Sometimes, you'll even get sales that are dedicated to a particular genre of collecting – such as Special Auction Services' annual Trains Galore event.

Traditionally the way to bid at auction was to attend on the day and then bid against others in the room but, with the rapid march of technology, many people now choose to only bid online. As a result, there can often only be a handful of people in saleroom on auction day, while everyone else sits in front of their computer screen. It's up to you whether you want to attend or stay at home (please bare in mind local restrictions), although there are a few things to consider. Firstly, auctioneers will have viewing periods before the sale, which is a great opportunity to get a closer look at the items you're thinking of buying and check their condition. If you can't make it to the viewing day, auctioneers are always happy to give you a condition check on the phone.

Once you've decided to bid make sure you set yourself a sensible target price and don't get carried away in all the excitement. A good way of doing this is to leave a commission bid with the auctioneer. For example, if you want to pay £40 for an item, give them a call beforehand and leave that bid on the books – you'll then get a call from the auctioneer letting you know whether you've been successful. If you are in the auction room bidding on the day, then don't show your hand too quickly – check to see what others are bidding first and then join in... and make sure you practise your poker face!

Always remember that auctioneers charge a commission price. This depends upon the individual auction house but it's normally around 20% plus VAT, so take that into consideration when leaving a commission bid – because the hammer price won't be the final price you pay. There are even extra charges if you choose to bid online too, which all adds to the cost. Also ensure you check the costs for postage and packaging because that will be added to the price as well. The best way to check an auction house's costs is to give them a call beforehand because they all differ slightly.

Finally, on the subject of auctions, it's worth considering eBay as an option too. Of course, this can be a slightly riskier choice because you don't get to see the collectables beforehand and have to rely on the honesty of the seller. To ensure you don't get ripped off, always check the seller's previous feedback to make sure they haven't had lots of negative responses from customers. Also, look at the items they've sold previously, if someone who has normally only sold imported handbags pops a rare Corgi model up for sale, then be on your guard. However, you are protected by both eBay and PayPal if things go wrong, so don't be totally put off giving it a go – you could get a bargain! ■

Introduction to... Collecting Diecast

Over the past year diecast has continued to perform well at auction and is always a regular sight at toy fairs up and down the country. The reason is simple: diecast is the most well-established area of collecting, with clear price guides to pieces available and lots of experts at auctioneers. As a result, collectors can easily compare prices to see what they should be paying, along with checking a list to see what models are particularly rare.

However, that's not to say diecast is necessarily booming and over the last few years we've heard rumblings that prices are starting to settle down after the huge price hikes around 10 years ago. This is particularly true for fairly average examples, which have seen their prices decrease slightly in comparison to a few years ago, e.g. a model that was worth £30 a couple of years ago is now going for £25. It's not a massive drop but it's still something worth thinking about if you're trying to put an estimate on what your items might be worth when sold.

So, why the drop? Well, some collectors strive to get the absolute best pieces for their collection. As a result, it's no longer good enough to just have a slightly tatty Dinky Toys Aston Martin, instead they want a mint in correct box Aston Martin and are willing to pay more for it. The impact is that high quality vintage models are maintaining, if not exceeding their previous prices, whereas the middle ground of okay examples are dropping off slightly. Worth considering if you're thinking of buying or selling at auction.

In some ways this is actually great news for those starting out their collection because it's possible to buy some very reasonably priced pieces to kickstart your hobby - rather than having to always pay through the nose. Then you can think about upgrading your collection to better quality diecast at a later date.

We've stated in previous guides that the description is key when looking through the auction listings because a slight difference in the way the wheels on a model are described could make a huge difference to the end value.

This was proved when Vectis Auctions held a huge two-day sale of Matchbox 1-75 models, which covered pretty much every model ever released by the London-based manufacturer, including some very rare variations that helped show the difference in price between common and unusual pieces. One Matchbox Regular Wheels No. 5b London Bus 'Players Please' sold for £80, while a Matchbox Regular Wheels No. 5b London Bus 'BP Visco-Static' sold for £560. The model itself is the same but some slight variations make a massive difference to the price.

One thing we really can't stress enough is that collectors should definitely do their homework and keep on doing their homework, even if they've been collecting for years. Making sure you've done your research before you look to purchase products at auction will help to identify rare pieces but it can also help to ensure you avoid any dodgy items that have been cobbled together. ■

Introduction to Model Railways

Although diecast models tend to make the headlines from auctions, with prices often driving into the thousands for rare pieces, model railways have continued to chug along nicely over the past few years and have performed consistently at sales up and down the country. Well, we guess this should be expected from one of the oldest collectables around, after all, some of the most valuable locomotives date back to the 19th century... diecast seems like a whippersnapper in comparison.

However, one thing we've been hearing is that it's not just the older pieces that are commanding decent prices at auction and that some collectors are happy to pay for relatively modern Bachmann Branchline or Hornby items. Often these are limited edition so as a collector looks to expand their model railway layout they may find that a locomotive that was only released a few years ago is now no longer available and subsequently commands a price similar, if not higher, than what it originally cost at retail. This is an interesting development and certainly one worth watching... especially if you're looking to make a profit on collectables you buy in a short space of time.

Another area that's proved to be a strong contender recently are the numerous locomotives and coaches produced by Wrenn Railways. Whenever these examples appear at auction they regularly match or even exceed their top estimates, particularly if they're in good condition. We recently asked an auctioneer about this and their answer was short but simple: "It's down to the quality". Wrenn pieces are known for being good runners and are made to a very high standard, which means people are happy to pay big money for them.

In some ways, that's one of the more unusual aspects of model railway collecting, compared to the likes of diecast or TV and film memorabilia... people are purchasing locomotives, coaches and accessories for a variety of reasons. Yes, some just want to display their favourite historical locos on a nice shelf and keep them in pristine condition, whereas others actually want to run the models they purchase on a working layout. With Wrenn Railways in mind, that helps to explain the high prices at auction because the reputation of these replicas as good quality runners that also look nice helps them to appeal to two different markets: collectors and modellers. With two different bidders vying for the same lot, the price can soar.

Meanwhile, some auctioneers are reporting that prices for O gauge locomotives and accessories have begun to plateau. As the largest of the standard British gauges it's likely that many collectors don't have the room to create a large O gauge layout so are opting for the smaller OO gauge instead... or maybe even venturing into the world of N gauge. O gauge model railways are an important part of model railway history but due to their age younger collectors simply don't remember playing with them as a child, so are opting to purchase older OO items instead. Quality O gauge pieces still perform well, but played with examples are becoming easier to buy for a reasonable price. ■

Introduction to... Toy Figures

Well there's only one word to describe the toy soldier pieces sold over recent years: "Britains". The famous and most well-established of all the toy soldier manufacturers has really dominated the auctions and as you'll see over the following pages a huge majority of the toy soldiers sold at auction have been produced by Britains. It's certainly comparable to the diecast auctions, which tend to be dominated by Dinky and Corgi Toys because they're the best known out of the manufacturers.

However, one thing that has been noticeable is that the number of toy soldiers being sold in general toy auctions has decreased slightly and that most auctioneers are choosing to sell toy soldiers as part of special figure auctions. Arguably this is a much better system as it ensures there's a wider choice for collectors in the same sale and you don't have to spend ages looking through countless catalogues for dribs and drabs of figures. In particular, Old Toy Soldier Auctions USA only deals in figures, as the name would suggest, and it has a huge variety of toys on offer from more modern pieces to very rare items like Courtenay knights. It regularly holds three-day auction and, because it's online, it means that collectors all over the globe have an opportunity to bid on very rare items. In the UK, Vectis regularly hold specialist military figure sales aside from its popular diecast and general toy auctions.

Another auctioneer that deserves a mention is Cottes, based much closer to home in Dorset. Valuer and auctioneer John Burch has uncovered an incredible stash of Britains Swoppets - the plastic models that can be swivelled and swapped - and has been drip feeding these items through his quarterly auctions. The quality of these pieces has been exceptional and even John has been surprised by their success.

On the subject of plastic figures, this is a growing area of the toy soldier market and is becoming almost as sought after as some of the rare metal pieces. Traditionally, the big money has always been paid for lead figures but the prices are beginning to creep up for plastic too. The reason for this is that because plastic figures didn't start being produced in mass quantities until the late 1960s, the collecting market simply hadn't matured enough and lead was still seen as the more traditional area of toy figure collecting. However, those people who played with plastic soldiers in the '60s are now adults with a bit more pocket money to spend and are keen to pick up those pieces they remember playing with as a child... or could simply never afford (like the impressive Britains Stage Coach). The result is that plastic is becoming more desirable and this is a trend that's only likely to grow in the years to come.

Of course, that's not to say that older lead figures won't continue to be collectable because their long history always ensures they have a place in the annals of toy collecting. Plus, there are numerous shows - such as the London Toy Soldier Show - which continue to be very popular. ■

Introduction to... Tinplate Toys

Tinplate collecting may not be as widespread as diecast collecting or model locomotives but it's still an extremely popular part of the hobby and some items, especially some of the superb robots made in Japan, can command huge prices at auction. Part of the reason why it continues to be so popular is that tinplate covers such a wide variety of themes and some toys date back to the late 19th century.

Just look through the pages ahead and you'll see a fantastic selection of items, from the aforementioned robots to dancing animals, vehicles, moving dioramas and lots more. As a result, when it comes to pieces at auction there can be plenty of different collectors keen to snap up an item. For example, a tinplate Jaguar could appeal to fans of the marque, general tinplate collectors or vintage car enthusiasts. Get all these three bidding in the sale room on the same day and the auctioneer is onto a winner... although it might not be so great for the buyer!

Looking through the history of why tinplate is so collectable it's clear to see how some examples can easily soar in the thousands. Firstly, many tinplate toys are big, bright and visually appealing items that display extremely well in a collection. If you've got a shelf of brightly coloured tinplate animals, then it's likely to appeal to people who never thought of themselves as a collector. What's more, if you get a working clockwork or battery-powered toy, then they're great to watch in action too... which only adds to the value.

One of the other things that pushes up the price for tinplate is that there are more collectors out there than objects available to the market... particularly if you're looking for quality. This comes from the fact that tinplate tends to rust if it's not looked after properly and can easily be dented during overly enthusiastic playtimes. Meanwhile, battery-powered pieces often suffer from rusty battery compartments because people had a habit of leaving the batteries in for months (if not years). With all this in mind you can see why something like the Nomura 'Batman' Robot sold for £3000 at Vectis.

Meanwhile, there's an interesting parallel now between tinplate toys that were mass produced and more expensive, large toys with complicated clockwork or battery powered functions... we'll deal with the latter first. These big toys, particularly at the start of the 20th century, cost significantly more than other toys available at the time, meaning they weren't mass produced. For example, some of the Marklin pieces could cost around £5, which is what a doctor at time would have earned in a week. The result is that not many of the remaining toys survived the test of time because there weren't that many to begin with, which has only helped to add to their collectability. On the other hand, cheap tinplate penny toys (e.g. small animals, little vehicles, etc) are also going up in the value. Although these were mass produced in the 20th century they were seen as disposable. Ironically, this had led to few surviving in decent condition, which has made them almost as collectable as their more expensive cousins. ■

Introduction to...

TV & Film

This year has seen TV and film collectables continue their seemingly meteoric rise with more and more appearing at auctions and toy fairs around the globe. What's more, the prices continue to rise too and compared to some other areas of collecting, TV and film memorabilia is performing exceptionally well. In fact, some auctioneers are reporting they simply can't keep up with demand, which is helping to push up the prices.

One thing that is interesting about TV and film collectables is that the items don't have to be particularly old in order to command high prices. Some of the tinplate treasures can be knocking on for 100-years-old, whereas some TV and film toys are just approaching their 40s. A skim through this section shows 'modern' toys like Transformers and Star Wars sitting comfortably alongside Thunderbirds from Dinky or Batman toys by Mego... and even those 'old' collectables date from the '60s and '70s.

Also, TV and film pieces appeal to a wide range of audiences from the older collector who remembers playing with the Corgi Batmobile when it was originally released in 1966 to younger Batman fans who have only just started reading the comics but are keen to own a piece of Bat-history. Events such as the London Film and Comic Con can be a huge eye opener about the typical age of TV and film collectors, along with the type of thing they collect. Earls Court can be almost completely full with punters and most under the age of 40, while the toys were even younger. Things like Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Might Morphin' Power Rangers, Transformers, Ghostbusters, Thundercats and Spider-Man lined the bulging tables of dealers. It is an impressive sight to see such a young army of collectors all keen to pay quite a lot of money to buy the items on offer. Long may it continue is what we say!

Even better is that some of these collectables can still be picked up for decent prices at toy fairs, car boots or jumble sales because people don't think that something from the '80s could be worth any serious cash. For example, we were lucky enough to get an unboxed Battle of the Planets Helisky diecast model for the princely sum of £1.50 - not bad when you consider some online sellers charge £80 for mint in box examples. Our advice to collectors is to always keep your eyes on emerging trends because you never know what the next big collectable could be!

Of course, we can't talk about TV and film without mentioning the elephant in the room: Star Wars. If anything over the past year interest has increased in this extremely lucrative and popular aspect of collecting... something we weren't sure was even possible. One auctioneer has reported that demand for original Palitoy action figures from Star Wars has become so high that prices are soaring higher than ever before - a vintage Vinyl Cape Jawa figure, thought to be one of only a handful that exist, has sold for over £20,000, more than doubling its pre-sale estimate. The sky really is the limit here! ■

Introduction to... Other Toys & games

The 'other' category is the slightly unglamorous name for the various toys, games and collectables that appear at toy auctions throughout the year but wouldn't really fill their own category. Here you'll find the likes of Scalextric, Meccano, LEGO, Action Man, plastic kits and plenty more. Although they're all put together, that doesn't mean they're not as important as the categories featured previously and, as you'll see, some of the toys achieve fantastic prices at auction houses.

As you can tell from that introduction though, the 'others' section still contains plenty of household names, like Meccano, Airfix and Scalextric. Interestingly, all three have their links with Hornby too – Meccano was invented by Frank Hornby, while Airfix and Scalextric are now both run under the Hornby Hobbies umbrella, which also includes Corgi.

In terms of value, it's those early Meccano sets and some of the Constructor series (including planes and cars) that tend to fetch the big money in the saleroom. Some of those original sets also came in superb wooden cases, complete with drawers and various compartments, so it's easy to see why these have become such attractive pieces.

Another popular choice is, of course, Scalextric. Originally launched in 1957 by Fred Francis, the original Scalextric slot cars were actually made in tinplate, rather than plastic, and have become very sought after today. Rather than the larger sets, it's often the individual cars that are worth the most when it comes to Scalextric, particularly the early plastic ones after Fred Francis sold Scalextric to Lines Bros.

One of the other household names you'll see crop up in the pages ahead is Action Man. Although released by British firm Palitoy on these shores, Action Man was based on the American GI Joe character developed by Hasbro. Seen by many as the original 'action figure' before Kenner came along with its 3 3/4-inch Star Wars figures, Palitoy was quick to expand on the GI Joe brand with new features (like flocked hair and those infamous 'eagle eyes'), outfits and vehicles. Interestingly some of the rare outfits can now be worth rather a lot!

Along with TV and film toys, the 'other' category is another section where we're seeing plenty of items that many consider to be 'collectables of the future' that could potentially increase in price in the years to come. One of the most interesting is the fact that prices for old videogames and consoles (in their original boxes, of course) are starting to creep up and we're seeing more of these lots appear at auctioneers. In fact, in the not too distant past, Aston's had enough to have an entire section of a sale dedicated to empty boxes for SEGA Nintendo games... ■

We round up some of the best collecting highlights sold throughout the year on eBay.

No matter which way you look at it, eBay revolutionised the collecting market - some would say for the best, while others may think it's actually been for the worst. However, there's certainly no disputing that eBay does throw up some fantastic collectables that you might not find anywhere else.

Back when it was launched in 1995 it must have seemed like a curious website that might occasionally have some interesting items for sale but since then it has grown into one of the biggest websites in the world with a turnover of millions. Of course, back in those early days you could use the website to pick up a bargain because not many people used it and sellers weren't always aware of an item's value. However, now there are millions of collectors around the world who ensure the price on eBay is often pushed up well above what the same toy may have sold for at a traditional auction or toy fair - as you will probably see from the items listed here.

eBay can also be a useful tool when you're checking to see how much your toys might be worth, as you can quickly search for similar pieces listed on the website. However, don't fall into the trap of looking at a 'Buy it Now' price for a current listing and thinking your toy is worth the same. The best thing to do is tick the 'sold listings' box when searching so you'll get a clearer picture of what items sold and how much they actually sold for. Although even then, make sure the item in question wasn't re-listed at a later date if the original sale fell through. ■

♦Who doesn't love a dinosaur?! This Dino Riders bundle from Tyco was certainly a roaring success. All the boxes appeared to be unopened and with only a few minor scuffs around the edges. Sold for £920 (18 bids).

♣ A pre-production Matchbox Superfast MB36 Draguar in a colour trial blue. It was in mint condition and was fought over by several keen bidders. Sold for £909 (30 bids).

♣ This Britains Herald Farm Set (H7591) was in very good condition, with all the animals held in place with the original string. There was no obvious damage or repair to any of the animals. Sold for £313 (8 bids).

♣ Bundle of Lego Pirates of the Caribbean sets, all brand new with unopened boxes and seals. A great addition to any collection. Sold for £870 (18 bids).

♣ Charge! This Timpo Mounted Roman Standard Bearer, in good condition, wasn't going to be stopped by anyone. Sold for £256 (34 bids).

♣ An Ertl The Dukes of Hazzard General Lee model car, manufactured in 1982. The box had slight age wear but the car had never been removed from its packaging. Sold for £401 (3 bids).

♣ Although this Matchbox Lesney No.34a Volkswagen '15cwt' Microvan wasn't sold with its box, it still pulled in the bids. In near mint condition, it had a blue body, silver trim, black base and rare black wheels. Sold for £1267 (18 bids).

♣ You don't often find vintage Star Wars Tri Logo Luke Skywalker Bespin figures in this condition! Mint on card, this rare find was UKG graded 80% and attracted some heated bidding online. Sold for £1623 (31 bids).

♣ This boxed Palitoy Joe Action Man Commander Power Rocket Command Centre is considered particularly rare. It came with unused decals, instructions and accessories still on the original plastic mould. Sold for £805 (12 bids).

♣ This vintage Star Wars Palitoy Snowspeeder Vehicle from the 1983 film Return of the Jedi, had only recently been graded. The contents of the box was even still sealed. Sold for £1491 (35 bids).

♣ Manufactured in Israel in the early 1960s, and this Gamda tipper truck series is now extremely hard to find and as such particularly sought after. In mint condition it had aluminium wheels, with full and nice decal number. Sold for £707 (15 bids).

♣ Was this the holy grail of Funko Pop models? Although in used condition, this glow in the dark Elvis 1970 was still a rare win for one lucky punter. Sold for £1500 (53 bids).

♣ An original pre-production Lesney Matchbox MB1 Mercedes Truck. The seller only knew of two in existence, and this version was in excellent condition with only a small casting flaw. Sold for £905 (35 bids).

♣ This WWF Hasbro Ultimate Warrior, from Series 3, was in such good condition that it was UK Graded 90 Gold. In this condition, it was no surprise that there was a lot of bidding. Sold for £764 (29 bids).

♣ Wakah, wakah! Have you ever seen anything like this - a custom made scale Muppet Palisades Theatre, with detachable stage curtain? Sadly, the figures and accessories weren't included in the sale. Sold for £1100 (62 bids).

♣ All the fun of the fair with a LEGO Creator Grand Carousel (10196). All pieces were included, the motor was working as was the sound brick. Instructions were slightly torn and the box had some slight damage. Sold for £720 (17 bids).

♣ A pre-War Dinky Kodak delivery van (No.28g) with smooth wheel hubs and open rear windows. There were some chips and dirt marks to the paintwork and transfers, although no metal fatigue. Sold for £565 (26 bids).

♣ A rare LEGO Speed Champions Mercedes AMG Petronas set (75995), which was a team gift in 2017. Brand new and still sealed, it was apparently the only one available on eBay. Sold for £621 (5 bids).

♣ Proving once again that mint action figures sell well! This rare Masters of the Universe He-Man drew a lot of attention when it went up for auction, and we can see why. Sold for £899 (37 bids).

♣ A Timpo Toys Medieval Knight with a translucent helmet and scabbard, circa 1970. It included a long sword and had been in the seller's family from new. Sold for £311 (14 bids).

♣ Dating from circa 1935 this Dinky Filling and Service Station (No. 48) was sold in excellent condition and in its original box. A truly stunning example! Sold for £781 (19 bids).

♣ Part of a larger collection of Robin Hood sets, this LEGO Crusader's Cart was super rare. All the bricks had been ultrasonically cleaned and all the mini figs, weapons and instructions were present. Sold for £1600 (4 bids).

♣ Produced in 1977, this Polistil Toys Herbie & Scorpion Rallye Monte-Carlo set, was in very good condition. Despite heavy bidding, one lucky collector walked away with a great example. Sold for £2000 (40 bids).

♣ This Corgi Juniors James Bond 007 gift set was in excellent condition and had never been open. The colours were bright and vibrant, with a nice clear cellophane which helped push the price up. Sold for £1065 (36 bids).

♣ A Corgi Gift Set 48 Transporter Set containing a Corgi 1148 Scammell Car Transporter, MGC GT, a Sunbeam Imp Monte Carlo, The Saint's Volvo, a Morris Mini Cooper De-Luxe and a Morris Mini Minor... all in near mint condition! Sold for £511 (20 bids).

♣ A 1/32 scale Timpo Medieval Knight, with a white head. The only damage to this fine fellow was a hairline crack that ran around his chest. Sold for £280 (10 bids).

♣ An original Scalextric James Bond set dating from 1968, which had been hidden away in the seller's loft for many years. It was sold in a fair condition for its age and contained its original track, 2 controllers, one Aston Martin car and one Mercedes. Sold for £711 (13 bids).

♣ A nice tinplate, battery-operated Attacking Martian Robot with the hard to find gold body. Chrome features, green port holes and plates in chest, red tinplate feet, by the Horikowa in the 1950s. Sold for £545 (21 bids).

♣ This Corgi Toys Gift Set 20 Scammell Handyman Car Transporter, was sold complete with all 6 Whizzwheel Cars. It had been stored away for over 40 years so only showed some slight paint chips. Sold for £935 (46 bids).

♣ A vintage LJN Toys Thunder Cats Stilt Runner, dating from 1987. It was sold mint in box, with the transfers all on their original sheet, instructions and advert leaflet. A great find! Sold for £890 (26 bids).

♣ This 1/32 scale slot car was an original Scalextric Mercedes 190sl from the 1960s. The car was in very good condition and ran well, although the lot was sadly unboxed. Sold for £567 (27 bids).

♣ The bubble on this Tri-Logo Star Wars Emperors Royal Guard, although nice and clear, had small dents to each corner. The card has lost some of the shine but overall it was in good condition. Sold for £930 (16 bids).

♣ Pre-war Britains lead Model Home Farm Series An English Flint Wall set. Included all the pieces to make up the display as shown on the box lid illustration. There were some marks, scuffs and paint loss. Sold for £741 (33 bids).

♣ A very rare 54mm scale Britains Set 641 Civilian Motorcycle and Sidecar, only issued between 1932 and '41. Some paint chipping and wear, otherwise generally fair to good overall. Sold for £531 (10 bids).

♣ This 1970s Timpo Wild West Cavalry Field Ambulance 277 was in excellent condition, apart from the poor patient laying on a broken stretcher! The box had faint crush marks, but was fresh and crisp, no price tags or tape. Sold for £366 (22 bids).

♣ This battery-powered Tyco Dino Riders T-Rex, complete with figures, was sold in pristine condition. It remained unopened although the box was starting to show some wear. Sold for £1570 (25 bids).

♣ A stunning early Noah Ark's mechanical money bank. At 4 inches long, it only showed some light age wear and paint chips. It made a delightful addition to someone's collection. Sold for £1232 (58 bids).

♣ A scarce vintage Corgi Toys Rocket Age Models Gift Set No 6, containing Bristol Bloodhound, Thunderbird Guided Missile, RAF Land Rover, RAF staff car, Decca airfield radar van and scanner. Sold for £1007 (32 bids).

♣ An unopened Willie Talk Ventriloquist Dummy from Horsman Toys in New York. At over 30 years he was a rare example with only light wear to the box corners. Sold for £390 (26 bids).

♣ This 1967 Hot Wheels Redline Custom Volkswagen Beetle started at just 99p and was sold with no reserve. Age related wear and tear didn't deter bidders! Sold for £700 (40 bids).

♣ A hand-cut, hand-painted, wooden limited-edition Stave 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' jigsaw puzzle with 575 pieces. It had 5-ply mahogany-backed pieces, and measured 14" x 16". Sold £4100 (28 bids).

♣ A rare Lego Technic Bell Boeing V-22 Opsrey. This set was cancelled and withdrawn by Lego, so was never sold. Still sealed and all pieces were present inside. Sold for £1020 (19 bids).

♣ Have you been gardening more during Lockdown? Then this pre-War Britains Miniature Gardening Series Garden Shelter No28MG, might be right up your street. Complete and in very good condition for age. Sold for £435 (22 bids).

♣ Proving that it isn't always the figures that sell for a lot. This vintage Star Wars Empire Strike Back Power Droid backing card was just that – a backing card! Believed to be 1 of 2 this proof card prototype is quite to find! Sold for £3100 (54 bids).

♣ This Timpo Wild West Cavalry Field Ambulance No.277 had remained in the attic, un-played with since the day it arrived from the factory. Unfortunately, the stretcher has not fared well during storage. Sold for £230 (15 bids).

♣ Circa 1969, this Airfix Attack Force set was from a loft clearance of childhood toys. The scarce set contained the original vehicles, soldiers and scenery. Sold for £207 (23 bids).

♣ This CMC 1/18th scale Ferrari 250 GTO was in new condition. The clear tape had been cut on one side of the polystyrene inner packaging and it had never been removed from the packaging. The model was complete with all the paperwork. Sold for £920 (19 bids).

♣ This Scalextric 1/32 scale slot car was an original Race Tuned C96 1936 6 Litre Auto Union Type C, made in 1965. The car was in very good condition having had little use. Sold for £360 (28 bids).

♣ Two versions of this Toy Story Collection Rare remote-controlled car were released. This was the more advanced version, which had a "follow me" mode. Had moving eyes, noises and a pop up 'wheelie' action. Sold for £400 (9 bids).

♣ A Master Replicas Muppets Kermit prop puppet, complete with box, stand and original paperwork. Highly sought after, this rare collectable had been on display in a glass cabinet since new! Sold for £430 (23 bids).

♣ Thought to date back to the 1930s (and of unknown origins) this hand-cut, push fit, wooden jigsaw puzzle of Sydney Harbour Bridge was made up of 475 pieces. The puzzle was all original, complete and in very good condition. Sold for £410 (39 bids).
